Healthcare Market Intelligence

The global pet blood tester market was valued at USD 728 million in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 995 million by 2031, exhibiting a CAGR of 4.7% during the forecast period. This growth is fueled by the expanding pet care industry, where diagnostic tools are becoming increasingly vital for veterinary healthcare.

Pet blood testers are specialized medical devices designed to analyze blood samples from companion animals like dogs and cats. These instruments measure key parameters such as blood cell counts, glucose levels, and biochemical markers, enabling veterinarians to diagnose conditions ranging from infections to organ dysfunction. The market offers both portable handheld units for point-of-care testing and benchtop analyzers for comprehensive laboratory analysis.
